The introduction of MDT (Multi-drug therapy) was a major achievement of WHO's global TB control programme. This paper shows that the availability of MDT in Indonesia, however, remains a problem. In 1999, a study on drug susceptibility of TB suggested that some TB strains were still resistant to some drugs and this caused a particular problem in Indonesia. Reports from Indonesia show that some TB patients still use alternative medicine (AM). One of them is the traditional "reflexology" which aims to cure TB. Some studies suggest that AM may be promising in the management of diseases such as TB, and therefore needs to be included in the MDT. The article shows that the Indonesian Ministry of Health had begun to consider, in 1994, interdisciplinary medical planning which can include AM. However, such planning could not be implemented because of lack of manpower and resources. The paper suggests that there is a need to increase manpower and resources for interdisciplinary medical planning.Effect of high-order aberrations on the quality of wavefront-guided laser surgery in eyes with long axial lengths and high refractive errors 82138339de
