WinAve is a traffic and weather application developed by Joe deBruin and designed for Windows Phone.Q: How to Make GitHub Commits Not Show up in SourceTree? I am trying to set up my development environment with SVN and SourceTree. I have GitHub as a source and use the URL of my repository. But now I am trying to add the option to commit directly to the repository and SourceTree sees this as an SVN commit and breaks apart my commit. Can anyone explain how to fix this? A: The commit command, when you pass it a remote branch, will create that branch and add the new commit. From SourceTree, select the branch you want to add a commit, and select Add from the context menu. The commit window will open. Enter the commit message, then "Commit" in the commit window, and SourceTree will upload the commit to GitHub and the remote branch. (Thanks to yjx for reminding me of this, and for the previous solution which is not what I need. I also have GitHub for Mac, and my commit window does not prompt me to choose a remote branch; however, GitHub for Mac does not handle branches in the UI like SourceTree does.)
