TagFlow is an application developed by Devfactor that intends to organize your files using tags. It allows you to quickly manage your files and allow you to sort them in a way that makes sense to you. Tags can be used to organize files by making them relate to one another. If you often find yourself making multiple versions of the same file in different locations, you may end up having a bunch of the same file. TagFlow solves this problem by using tags to make the process of organizing the file easier. Using the app, you can use tags to group files, so that you can easily access and find the files you need, as well as filter your file list in many different ways. The filter settings can be edited from the main window, and there are five categories of filters available: - Search by Tags - Exclude Tags - Sorting Options - Date Options - System Options The sorting options can be modified to change the order in which your files are shown, as well as to change the way in which the files are sorted. The search settings can be changed to specify the type of file that should be searched for and how it should be searched. The application also allows you to create tags for your files so that you can store them in groups for easy access. You can add files to your collection by simply dragging and dropping them from other locations on your Mac, or even from other file managers, into the application's main window. The app can also load folders from other locations, giving you easy access to files you may have created. You can change your list of tags so that you can make things easier on yourself when looking for a file, or simply add files that you think should be tagged. And finally, the application also comes with a few advanced search features that can be used to filter your files by name, file type, file size, date, and folder. Show more... Before anything, we should point out that TagFlow is in a fairly young development stage (Beta), which means that you may encounter some bugs, even though we have found the app to be pretty stable during our tests. It also means that the current features are bound to be improved, and new ones will be added later on. Thoroughly organize and categorize your files using smart tags Working with TagFlow is a very straightforward process. To get started, simply add files by dragging and dropping them from their location onto the app's main window. Please note that you can add individual files or load entire folders, just as easily. Next, add tags that are common to all the currently loaded files from the first tab. In the next two tabs, you are provided with the possibility to add tags to all files within various folders and preview the associated tags to all the currently loaded tags. Once you're done, click the "Add" button, located on the upper left corner of the main window. Intuitive and advanced search features You are now greeted by what is the app's main section. You will notice that it contains a search field in the upper part of the main window and the actual list of all your files with their corresponding tags. That said, you can search a file by name (:text), by file type (:type), to exclude a tag from your search (:not), to search for files minimum or maximum size (:size-min or :size-max) and even by file date (:date-before or :date-after).
