way. In an assembly of the kind described, such as a center bearing or a damper assembly, it is common to provide a toothed damper plate or bearing plate which is rotatable relative to a housing for the bearing or damper. Such a bearing or damper can be used to mount a damper rotor to a damper shaft of a rolling piston for a shock absorber. Other applications include the mounting of a bearing or damper to a housing of an integral strut in a damper strut assembly. A conventional construction of such a toothed plate comprises an annular toothed ring, which can be fixed to the damper shaft or housing. The damper plate is rotated, such that it engages the toothed ring with the teeth of the ring. The ring, which is commonly made of bronze or other metal, is easily subject to damage during assembly or operation. To avoid this and save assembly time,
