Microzine Reviews: THE MOTHERSHIP is Free Online Blogging Magazine Following last week's whirlwind opening "month" of the year, today is filled with the trappings of Christmas. As this week is one when we can all "enjoy our breaks", I'm attempting to make the most of it, by indulging in some mental vacations. One such escape is to go back to when I was in school and use the online feature to look through the archives to the old, university-based Microzine I created and edited for many years. Working in schools, it struck me a lot about the place of blog writing in relation to teaching and learning. Of course, in the "olden" days, we were in the diaspora, without the Internet, so access to online journalism was a bit more limited, but there was writing in magazines, newspapers and, of course, newsletters and our own microzines. There was also a lot of fear around using the Internet. A lot of us were afraid that our editors would see what we wrote and reject it, as we knew that once they did, it could never get published again, even if we were working on our own microzine. And the introduction to journalism courses and discussions in schools wasn't all that welcoming and open to humour. So imagine my surprise when, as I go through my old Microzines, the name of the publication is THE MOTHERSHIP. The Motherhood was an experiment in producing an online magazine for school students in the mid 1990s. It ran for a few years and then I moved to university in Sussex, where I created another magazine called Maths and Miserables. The Motherhood started as a reaction to the fact that the usual magazine for the new wave of school kids in the mid-1990s was called Space Ranger. If I was going to name a magazine, it would be something fun and upbeat. The first issue was published in September 1995 and was filled with a mix of jokes, poems and other material that was relatively new at the time, especially about and by women. There were articles on feminist theory, behaviour modification in schools and self-esteem. The other magazines I published was on a more academic nature, and thus were 3da54e8ca3
