Being able to see my social network's Facebook notifications with more than a few red error messages or a million unread messages right there on the desktop really helps me recognize the data. Many applications, though, aren't quite as accommodating as that. How to integrate Zapier notifications onto your desktop So I was inspired to create this little desktop icon that has a Zapier integration so I can get notifications on my Mac desktop of new Facebook messages without having to go through the browser. It basically takes messages from the Zapier app, parses them, and changes the icon on your desktop and toolbars to a red checkmark. The interface is really basic and it is similar to the traditional desktop notifications, but it works great on the desktop. Step by Step: 1. Grab the Zapier desktop icon by right clicking on any of the desktop icons and opening the zip file. 2. Drag the zip file wherever you want on the desktop. 3. Right click on the desktop icon, open the properties, and click on the custom icon tab. 4. Name the icon what you want, maybe something that doesn't match anything on your desktop. Click OK. 5. Click on the icon to launch the Zapier app. 6. If a desktop notification appears to the left of the address bar, click on the notification and choose Notify Me. 7. Select your platform in the drop down below the notification icon, add a title, any tags, choose the channel you want to use, and click on Send. 8. The notification icon should be checking for new messages on your desktop. 9. There you go, Zapier for Mac Desktop Notification integration with
