The internet's most successful dating app to date is reportedly branching out to the world of cryptocurrency. Coingecko.com, which offers cryptocurrency metrics and analysis, as well as company and project information for more than 1,300 coins and tokens, has launched a new suite of products designed specifically for cryptocurrency users, according to a blog post published Friday. The move, which comes after the site scooped up $1 million in funding from CoinFund and $350,000 from a group of crypto investors, is designed to appeal to crypto's "mature" community. "Our growing success and user base are driving us to create a new set of products for crypto users," said Bloomberg quoted CoinGecko chief executive officer Nathan Tuchscherer as saying. "We want to be the place where crypto users can go to find the most accurate and up-to-date news and data about crypto." Notable releases include a new project profile tool, an experimental algorithm intended to provide a "signal" of a project's "expectation of block size," as well as a new "CoinGecko Rankings," which — again, according to the company — looks to "provide an easy way to determine a project's relative popularity based on their active community." According to CoinGecko, the new tools come in response to the growth and success of the crypto sphere in recent years. Along with Bitcoin, Ethereum and Stellar's XLM and IOTA have broken through the $1,000 mark in recent months. Bitcoin has catapulted from around $20,000 to roughly $13,500 in the process.
