I need to serve that image to the user, and it has a limited size of 1MB. So, if the user downloads the image from the bucket, he'll be charged for more than his quota. Can I avoid this? A: No. There's no way to do it. To comply with the quotas you need to serve the image at some dedicated URL pointing to your own service that you have access to. If you don't have access to a publicly accessible domain and you can't have your own server and application you have no other choice but to provide an instance that will handle the requests and will try to serve the image from Google storage. Since you said that "the image has a limited size of 1MB", I guess the only alternative you have to prevent the service from being billed is to increase the quotas. However, that will probably set you
