This particular release.Today marks two years ago that I wrote my very first blog post for WordPress. Which really isn't a lot of time for any one person to create an entire blog and a few months to begin monetizing it. I know how hard it is to start a blog especially when you have no money and no support from the community. I just want to take this time and reflect on my first year and what I have learned so far. I have moved to the United States from Canada, moved to another country, developed more contacts and brand ambassadors, built a company and an audience, and improved my company and my blog in more ways than I could have predicted at the time. My Blog Stats at the start and end of 2015 from Google Analytics. Moved To The United States I moved to the United States on the 30th of April 2015. Two years ago.

Q: Write object to file before sending to API I'm currently using Okta to develop our Identity Server for our SAML endpoint. They have a feature that allows us to create CSV files from various parts of our API. (For example, one method could have an object like so: public void Generate(User user) { using (var doc = XmiWriter.Create("User.csv")) doc.WriteStartElement("User"); // Headers doc.WriteStartElement("Id"); doc.WriteString(user.Id); doc.WriteEndElement(); // Attributes doc.WriteStartElement("Name"); doc.WriteString(user.Name); doc.WriteEndElement(); // Add more ... } } The way Okta does this is by creating a.csv file in a specific folder, with a name being formed from the method name, a timestamp, and a.csv extension. The API then retrieves the file and parses it, and our client will then use the results (which contain a parsed set of objects, filled with the data we added earlier). This approach allows us to move the various pieces of user data into other endpoints of our API without having to rewrite all of that data. However, I have a case where our client API (both desktop and web) can generate its own data that will be sent to the Identity Server, and I want to write
