The invention relates to a vehicular power supply system, and particularly a power supply system applicable to a hybrid vehicle. In the case of a hybrid vehicle, which has an engine and a motor, and is equipped with a power supply system, the power supply system has a power supply path from a power source such as a battery and a path for supplying the power to a load, such as a motor. In a power supply system having such a structure, one example of the power supply path is a path in which the power source is branched, and one example of the path for supplying the power to the load is a path in which the power source and the load are connected by a switch. Another path of the power supply system is a path for supplying the power to the motor on the power supply path when a state occurs in which the power is supplied from the battery to the motor. When the state occurs, such a path is called a path of current supply. The power supply path and the path of current supply may be formed by making use of a DC/DC converter. The configuration of the power supply system including the path of current supply as described above will be described below. The path of current supply is formed by the DC/DC converter. The DC/DC converter is a regulator which controls the direction of current flow between the battery and the motor, based on a voltage between the battery and the motor. It is therefore not possible to allow the current to flow from the battery through the load and the path of current supply. A switch (a bidirectional switch) is provided which switches between the power supply path and the path of current supply. Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 2005-192743 (corresponding to US20050124860) discloses the above power supply system. As is shown in FIG. 2 of this specification, in the power supply system, a path of current supply is provided between the battery and the DC/DC converter, and a switch is provided between the path of current supply and the battery. However, the power supply system as disclosed in the above patent document has a problem that the current flowing on the battery cannot be prevented from flowing to the load side when the switch is turned off. As a result, the battery capacity is reduced, which reduces the performance of the power supply system.Prevalence of Interstitial Cystitis/Painful Bladder Syndrome: An Internet-Based Survey. Q: Laravel 5 - User defined password hashing algorithm I am new to PHP and have been using Laravel for some time now. So far its a great framework but recently I ran into an issue with password hashing. Generally when you log into any website you authenticate using some kind of hashing algorithm to generate a unique password for your login. So if I am logging into a site like gmail, every time I login I generate a random password using the password_hash() function and store it in the database. In php if I have a function called generateRandomPassword, how do I go about adding password hashing to this function to make it use something other than password_hash()? For instance, I want to add something like this to my function: $password = password_hash($password, PASSWORD_DEFAULT); Any help with this would be great. Thanks! A: One easy way to do this is to simply override the 'password' key on your $user object. This is a quick and dirty way of overriding user password hashing. user.php $user->password = password_hash($password, PASSWORD_DEFAULT); registration.blade.php This method comes with a few problems. First of all, you should probably not be assigning passwords to users. You should always be hashing passwords. This will probably break your users. Secondly, as the previous answer points out, this makes your user's password vulnerable to being logged in by other users in your system. 2011 NAB Women's Championship The 2011 NAB Women's Championship, known for sponsorship reasons as the ANZ Australian Women's Championship 2011, was the 17th season of the NAB Women's National Basketball League (WNBL).
