We have isolated and characterized a human homolog of the TRPM2 channel, a member of a new subfamily of the transient receptor potential (TRP) channel superfamily. The TRPM2 channel subunit has been characterized as a calcium-permeable nonselective cation channel. Cloned TRPM2 channels were stably expressed in human embryonic kidney 293T cells and used to screen a human brain cDNA library. The deduced amino acid sequence of the channel is highly homologous to the corresponding region of the recently described TRPM6, a putative new type of nonselective cation channel. Especially the regions of the M6 domain and of the pleckstrin homology domain are highly conserved. This finding supports the idea that the TRPM2 protein
