The game plays like a movie with scenes that progress from one to the next. The progression of the scenes occurs at the specified time intervals. After every scene, the player is given the choice to continue with a new scene or go back and explore what just happened. The game is meant to be played with mouse, as it is the typical and most convenient user interface. The game was built with the program "Storyteller." It supports the playback and editing of files. Everything you see is included in the game, except for some background images, created by me, which weren't visible in the first version. If you would like to see your work in this game or you would like to share your work, feel free to contact me at: I was looking for something in a similar tone, until I found this game. It's a slideshow-like story, where you're watching the life of a worker and child. There are several scenes, where you change time by clicking the button and don't have to wait for any progress bar. Every scene is structured to turn you around the story of a particular person. For example, you are seeing how a family and a child's life, in 1987, changes. I'm looking for a patron, someone who can help me to finish the game. Uncompressed sound and

Gameplay The game plays like a movie with scenes that progress from one to the next. The progression of the scenes occurs at the specified time intervals. After every scene, the player is given the choice to continue with a new scene or go back and explore what just happened. All the gameplay elements are visible in the game (no hidden scenes or jumping puzzles). Sometimes the choice is simple, other times it gets a bit complicated. For example, the player is supposed to click a kid every once in a while, to get a certain book, but the kid tries to run away. In such a situation, click the kid first and then click the book. A good part of the game is spent in the family. You can change persons and what happens in the family by clicking on them. You can also hear the life of a household, now and then. The family in the game has a rather modern life, but the life in the mid 1980s was somewhat more simplified. For example, a housekeeper in the game is a cleaner, who comes

Q: What is the difference between a strategic and a tactical admiral? Is the difference that tactical admirals focus on intelligence and strategic admirals focus on firepower? If so, why the duality of this distinction? A: In more recent use, it's often used as a means of defining naval officers of different classes. Let's say you have an admiral who has been tasked with a fleet's "tactical" admiral, who has responsibility for the use of naval forces in, say, a naval battle.
