Sustained tryptophan hydroxylase mRNA level in rat brainstem following repeated bicuculline administration. The effect of repeated administration of bicuculline on tryptophan hydroxylase mRNA level in rat brainstem was investigated. Microdissection and Northern blotting of tissue from different parts of the brainstem revealed higher levels of mRNA in the medial and lateral parabrachial nuclei. Elevated mRNA level was found in areas that regulate sleep and pain. These results demonstrate that the tryptophan hydroxylase gene is regulated by the same mechanisms that regulate the expression of other anxiety-related behavior.// (C) Copyright Gennadiy Rozental 2001. // Distributed under the Boost Software License, Version 1.0. // (See accompanying file LICENSE_1_0.txt or copy at // // See for the library home page. // //!@file //!@brief thin wrapper over C library function //
