"The first line of text from the Steam description of Elden Ring states the game is "a fantasy action RPG". It is in this respect, that I would, as others have before, go as far to say this is not at all what Elden Ring is. I am well aware this is not an original take on the idea of a "RPG" game and something that has been done many times before in many different ways, but what makes Elden Ring different to all of these other games is the title and the setting and the lore. The game is absolutely beautiful. I don't mean beautiful as in the graphics are beautiful to look at, the environment is lush and colourful, but beautiful in the sense that it sounds. It sounds like a grand adventure tale that you would expect to find in a good fantasy novel, but it isn't just a throwaway, window dressing story that has little to do with the real world. The story is epic, fun and has your character develop throughout the story from a rather innocent character to a brash and ambitious character who gets involved in a civil war. The writing is excellent, the voice acting is very well done and has a nice story telling feel to it. The game play is also interesting, the combat being based around a melee/ranged attack system. All the characters are given a personality of their own, and will react to you as you play through their missions. The combat is done with a combination of pressing R to attack, Z for magic and X for melee, with your arrows being used for ranged attacks. You are able to upgrade your skill trees to boost your attributes. Combat is straightforward, but challenging. You get an experience point each time you hit, and have your stats increase. When you get hit you get a red shield to represent a blow from an opponent. Your shield will eventually turn a different colour depending on what type of strike you have suffered, and on what class your shield is protecting. The only enemy classes that I have encountered so far are ranged attacks, mage and melee. I have only encountered two characters so far, but they have all been fairly interesting characters with interesting backgrounds. I would like to see more enemy types introduced though, as the current ones (including one that is a beast!) can be a pain. The various environments that you visit will change depending on the class you are playing as, ranging from bustling cities, to the forests of the wilderness, to the snowy terrains of a forgotten world that was destroyed by another race.
