Gestrinone and intraamniotic prostaglandin E2 increase human parturition. Human pregnancy has been associated with increases in progesterone and prostaglandin E2 (PGE2) concentrations that modulate the process of parturition. The objectives of this study were to determine whether gestrinone, a potent luteolytic agent that stimulates PGE2 production, would be associated with increased human parturition. Gestrinone administered intramuscularly in a double-blind study design in late pregnancy induced cervical ripening and labor in 98% of patients. Intraamniotic infusion of PGE2 in a sequential design increased the labor rate to 74% from 12.5% in the placebo group. PGE2, administered in combination with gestrinone at labor, induced labor in 100% of patients. We conclude that gestrinone stimulates PGE2 synthesis in the decidua. PGE2 in combination with gestrinone increases the parturition rate in human pregnancy. Q: Does following pattern of `malloc` calls make object's memory doubly free? I know that modern Linux/UNIX systems perform short term storage for allocates via the MMU, thus we should not double-free memory. But sometimes I see the malloc() calls are scattered. Here's a basic example: const char *msg = malloc(1000); ... free(msg); free(msg); Here, are there more interesting cases that are similar to this one? A: Yes, that is a case of double-freeing. In your case, you should allocate block containing the message, then the free the pointer to it. const char *msg = malloc(1000); ... free(msg); d0c515b9f4
