The scientific, medical and diagnostic industries use it to perform a variety of tasks ranging from micrography of cells and tissues in the study of disease, to the identification and typing of microbial pathogens. The use of light for microscopic imaging provides a great number of useful attributes such as being non-ionizing, non-destructive and provides a means to produce well defined images without the use of ionizing radiation. However, the majority of current existing in-vivo imaging techniques is based on macroscopic light scattering.

As such, these imaging techniques are limited in terms of resolution, in both lateral and axial resolution. Further, the use of contrast agents and resolution-enhancing agents, both of which are needed to discern a given object, adds to the overall complexity of the imaging system. Accordingly, there is a need for a microscopic imaging system that is able to generate images with both improved resolution in the object plane and in the detector plane. Pakistan is a great example of failure to understand the basics of the class struggle. Islamism was made possible by the failure of the N developers LessQ: Alert when certain website becomes offline We have been told by a good friend to only leave the data we need to be online on our website. But we also have a few sub-domains, let's say: www.example.com, www.example.com/api and www.example.com/data where we have more information as JSON. So my question is: how can I check if one of our sub-domains isn't online any longer and alert the user? The same solution should work for mobile, tablet, desktop etc... An example would be a PHP/Javascript script on all our sub-domains. If we think it's not the best idea to put the data on the internet then we can put it on a DB, but that is not necessary. A: I would use a cron job to poll to check if the target url is still working. That way it could automatically alert users if the url changes without user interaction. This is the code I would use to check if an url exists: $url = ""; $parsed = parse_url($url); $options = array(); if(!empty($parsed['scheme']) &&!empty($parsed['host']) &&!empty($parsed['path'])) $options = array( 'http' => array( 'method' => "HEAD", 'timeout' => 3, ), ); if (!empty($options)) $fp = @curl_init($url); else $fp = @file_get_contents($url); $err =

The Needle park in Lofoten is lit by a full moon at sunset. Photography is a hobby that I often steal spare time from the troubles of the world and it won't be long before the colors of the sunset turn orange, then red. It all started with a radio. I was in the shop where I used to work about 10 years ago working on radios. I was between jobs at that time and just sorting out life things when I starting cleaning the shop. While doing this, I found this old radio. It was from the last decades of the 60s. Soon after I bought it, I realized this was a first issue transistor radio. And the reason I bought it was because of a picture I had of 3 men at a needle park in northern Norway standing next to a fake car. I remember the photo was in a book of photos taken in northern Norway. There was in the group the owner of this radio and a guy who owned the fake car. They were standing next to me at the needle park and I wanted to see how the photo had turned out. I remember thinking to myself : " I would love to stand in front of this time now and get a photo like in the photo hehe". The guy had about 5 photos he took there and I got something not I was used to. It was single exposure a B&W film by Kodak Ektra. And the day it turned out was a great day. A 36kW Stingray amplifier.
