cleanup and remediation that uses a crystalline material. 2. Description of the Prior Art A tremendous amount of surface water is contaminated with waste products of human activities. The majority of ground water in the U.S. contains compounds, such as arsenic, carbon, chromium, copper, lead, mercury, selenium, and the like. According to an article in the Journal of the Water Pollution Control Federation, No. 97, October 1995, the EPA estimates that waste products from urban populations, industries, and agriculture have contaminated at least 50% of all the U.S. waterways. The problems associated with contaminated surface water include health hazards, environmental degradation and the difficulty of disposing of such water. While methods to remove contaminants from water have been developed, most are expensive and require extensive, often complex,
