Icorrect Editlab Pro 6.0 Crackl.From 8.3 billion Light Years away, the Abell 2318 galaxy cluster is an area of sky that would be seen with the naked eye if viewed from the surface of the Earth. This first light image of the distant cluster was captured by the Hubble Space Telescope. Scientists using the NASA/ESA Hubble Space Telescope have imaged the first galaxy cluster to be discovered beyond the distant Universe's equivalent of our own Milky Way galaxy. The cluster, known as Abell 2318, is located 8.3 billion light years away from Earth. In reality, the cluster is an area of sky that would be seen with the naked eye if viewed from the surface of the Earth. The cluster was discovered in 1916 when astronomer

Edwin Hubble (1889-1953) used the 100-inch (2.5m) mirror of the Mount Wilson 100-inch telescope in California to carefully study hundreds of galaxies. Galaxies have an enormous range in size, but some are not just large but also very large. Some galaxies span the width of a human city and they typically contain hundreds of billions of stars. However, Hubble is not just used to study galaxies - it is also used to study the earliest beginnings of the Universe. These earliest galaxies were incredibly small and far too distant for anything but the Hubble to see. 'It looks like a swarm of galaxies with bright knots,' explained the Hubble team's leader, Robert Martel of the Space Telescope Science Institute. 'The galaxy is dark except for the bright spots which are its nuclei. Around a hundred galaxies are linked together by strings of glowing gas in bright knots and filaments, but they are not embedded in dark matter.' In the year

1913, Edwin Hubble also found that these 'glowing knots' appeared to be moving away from us, making him think that they were in fact other galaxies. He gave his first name to the two galaxies he observed that day - 'The Whirlpool in the Universe' and 'The Fly in the Cathedral'. It wasn't until 1917 that the true nature of this new kind of galaxy was established by the University of Chicago astronomer Edwin Hubble. He found e79caf774b
