to have the Transport Canada experts witness that same day. After experiencing no problem or delays on the train journey and on other occasions, Pinkerton said he had been feeling fine on the morning of Saturday. He said he boarded the train, looked around, and decided not to sit down. Pinkerton said something had struck him from behind, and he then bumped into a suitcase. He said he then tried to move it and realized something was wrong. He continued to struggle with the luggage, which was causing him to struggle in pain, for about 30 seconds. Pinkerton said the pain intensified during the struggle and he gradually fell to the floor. On Sunday, after he didn't feel well, Pinkerton called a cab to take him to the hospital, where he was given morphine. Pinkerton said he was not an expert on railway industry accident claims, but he did have some knowledge. He said he had "a very strong feeling that I was hurt by the railroad." Pinkerton said the pain did not go away entirely even after he was given morphine on Sunday. While he was still in hospital, Pinkerton's lawyer was contacted to sign papers to start a civil case. Pinkerton said his lawsuit would also name Trans-Canada, the driver, the driver's company, and Victoria. Pinkerton said he would not name the cab company as there was a no-fault compensation system in place. JONATHAN HARRIS / QMI Agency Mike Geary said he looks forward to (right) returning to work for the Calgary company that has been in his family for three generations.(QMI AGENCY) "Very negative," Pinkerton said of the injury he suffered.
