I want to extract URL content only from a list of URLs. I am using function from PHP URL Parser that works perfectly in Chrome but doesn't work at all with IE or Firefox. I am currently using this code to get the URL content: $url = ''; $dom = new DOMDocument(); @$dom->loadHTMLFile($url); $links = $dom->getElementsByName('a'); foreach ($links as $link) { $href = $link->getAttribute('href'); $href = str_replace(array('%2f', '%2f', '%2f'), '-', $href); $href = preg_replace('/(.?):\/\/([\^\s])$/', "$2", $href); echo $href; } This code works perfectly, but in IE or Firefox the URL's don't get the chars to get converted to filename.. Any ideas why this is happening and how to fix this? A: The trick is to use preg_quote which will convert to ASCII text. And of course, like any good regex, you can use global modifiers like this: // remove any existing white space $url = preg_quote($url, '~'); // remove white space at the beginning and end $url = preg_replace('/^ *+| +$/', '', $url); // replace '%2f' with a '-' for URL parsing $url

Theme song: Gibbous theme from the movie of the same name A Cthulhu adventure is a one of a kind videogame that is unique because of its Lovecraftian visions, original characters, graphic style and the puzzle-like twist that could be found in the actions and in the memories of the characters. The story is presented in a way that any player could empathize with it and having learned a bit about the mythos, could relive it. The game features crazy characters, a main storyline, and a couple of extra missions available as DLCs. All the characters are based on myths and stories from Lovecraftian universe. Each of them had its personality, philosophy, story, motivation, past, and future. But most importantly, there is an old and wise man living in a dark house that plots the whole story, and may takes you out of your comfort zone. No matter what, you will be taken back in time and you will be wise enough to avoid the mistake of a possible time paradox. You will also encounter characters and places from Lovecraftian universe, but also from the original comic series "The Miskatonic Library". Some of them, who seem unimportant at the beginning, will be the key to the whole story. Your adventure starts at a very bad time with the turn of the century. But you will need to survive and face dangerous things. But first you must face the investigation of a disappearance of a "Cthulhu". There is an old man living in a dark house who plots the whole story, and makes you live in a time where monsters are still around and you can't do anything but keeping your head alive and your wits about you. You need to solve some puzzles, to investigate and to find out how you'll escape from the story.

and Treasure Map Tired of searching the Bermuda Triangle, I've heard many tales of the reach of pirates in the New World and now it's time to explore the Caribbean islands and maybe find the treasure. Before we embark on our conquest of the New World we must prepare as best we can, and I mean everything - from armaments, to provisions, to a safe place to assemble as you prepare for battle. Now, take some time to spy out that friendly home port, the only thing better than the smell of fresh fish, freshly caught, is the smell of a well-stocked frigate. It's time to do a full inventory before we set sail - I make sure of every thing you might need to fish, hunt or gather in one place. To borrow from the TV show, now it's time to splurge - we don't have the millions of riches the pirates of Treasure Island did, so it's going to take some investment. You've got some goldsmith galleons that you've won in battle or found on the sea floor. And you've got an extra brush or two. You need to make some silver or brass cannons. Our island is filled with cheap musket balls, but how cheap can they be? Aren't they good enough for fighting other pirates? So, make sure you're got a supply of lead for your muskets and give your cannons a polish of some sort. Now it's time to find some more loot - because you can't make good bread without wheat, your crews need good, hardtack and you need cheese for your fish. This might sound like hard times, but it can't be that bad, you got one of the largest fishermen communities in the New World. Next, I'd like you to use your favorite paintbrush to mark the oceans that you should expect to encounter. Almost all pirate ships had some sort of lookout, or pilot at the stern so they could get around the rocky islands - they're also a great way to start saving crew so you can have a bigger crew when they meet Zulu. Now, stretch your canvas to the largest size you can. Get your crew to help you stick some shipping systems to the brush - life boats, sail, etc. Finally, pick a nice date and set sail. Bringing to the pirates of the New World, one of the

We live in interesting times, and there is no going back. There is also no good way of knowing what the future holds. We are, as usual, amidst economic and financial storms. No one really knows what is going to happen next, and that leaves us all feeling anxious. Stressful times It has been decades since anyone could feel happy about the economy. Our situation is something that has been brought about by people's actions over many years, and although there have been ups and downs, it is time that we take stock and look forward. We, as a country and as a people, have given that a long time to come. The value of a typical pension is questionable nowadays, and all that money that we've been saving up for so many years isn't going to bring us any relief. The way we spend our time and the state of our society has brought about this situation and it is going to take time to move out of it. We have managed to channel a large part of our resources to the economy. Both for tax purposes and because the population has worked hard and long years
