Its authors have gone to some lengths to include features they think could be helpful, such as file transfers, screen sharing, file transfer resume and others. This is an effort that needs to be more clearly communicated to users. The "Addons" section is meant to be a list of addons that will provide the user a chance to choose from a list of features that are available. PaulyChat will need to figure out a way to integrate the addons into the main program. I recommend an "Addons"-submenu in the main PaulyChat menu bar. Below is an example of how it could look like: The format would be similar to a little side menu. In the example above you could just navigate using the menus, but in reality PaulyChat would have controls to open the addons menu, add a new addon, delete an addon,.... In the course of configuring the addons I would suggest adding a Help button to the PaulyChat menu bar to direct users to the Addons help page. It is always good to try and make the user interface clean and easy to understand. I had this in mind when I redid the download link to the Help menu. It was originally in plain text, but I thought I could make it more friendly. I did add the "h" to the link but there is more that could be done. Perhaps other members of the paulychat project could work on the UI, just some simple things to help new users. There could be a tutorial somewhere in the menus, perhaps in the 'Help' or 'About' menu. Perhaps that would be a good place to put it. The 'About PaulyChat' menu would be a good place, as it would give a brief description of the program and links to further information, including the other addons. If there is a page, which could be shared, for example, (right) where
