Before we examine the basics of Photoshop, let's first introduce what layers are. Layers allow you to group objects together for rearranging later on. The most basic of layers are the top layer, and non-top layers. These are the layers you'll work with most when editing images. The concept of layers is simple. If you're familiar with using Microsoft Word or any other document editor you'll be able to understand the concept of layers. Think of a layer as a piece of paper. In this analogy it's like a page in a document that you can split apart at the end by lifting the page up and moving it to a different page. This is a similar concept to the way layers are used in Photoshop. In Photoshop, you can add a new piece of paper at the top of your document. This means that the top layer is the layer with the original image in Photoshop. Below that is the next layer, which is generally black (see Figure 1). Figure 1. Layers in Photoshop You can see that you can separate the original image from the different versions of edits you want to save on a new layer. The top layer is called the base layer, while the next layer is called the visible layer (Figure 2). Figure 2. Layers in Photoshop Layers are used as a tool to facilitate photo retouching. Photoshop does not have a way of deleting or fading out layers. You can move or remove any of the layers by clicking on the layer and then moving or deleting it. An example of a common editing task would be to selectively erasing a detail or destroying an object from the background. To do this, select the layer you wish to edit, and then move or delete the layer. Quick Tip If you accidentally select the background (non-layers) in an image, you can quickly remove the background by Ctrl+Clicking on the background in the Layers palette. When you press Ctrl, the background is selected. Photoshop's layers allow you to move one image over another. You can do this by selecting multiple layers and choosing Move To Layer from the Edit menu. You can also move individual layers by positioning the layer above or below all other layers. In Figure 3, you can see the original image and the layer below the original image. Figure 3. Move a layer above and below other layers You can

I found out that I can check whether my list contains a string, using the "in" operator and I wonder what is the difference between them? Is there any difference when it comes to performance? A: The `list.__contains__()` function returns true if the given item is in the list and that's the case in your question. The `list.__contains__()` function takes an optional argument (other argument, if any) and the default value of that argument is an empty sequence. In other words, if you don't pass an argument, the empty sequence is used as an argument. The `list.__contains__()` function only takes an item of the list as an argument and does not accept a key. The `list.__contains__()` function is the same as the `list.__getitem__()` function for an item. The `list.__`

Hamburger Heavens A friendly owner and hardworking staff are a welcome addition to this already great little deli. We'll come here for baked goods and sandwiches any day of the week. But on the weekends we always make a point to enjoy whatever the deli is cooking up. Favorites include the blueberry crepes, the panini and the meatball sub. Long before a certain "Mamma Mia!" singer, Helen joined a young couple at the Hamburger Heaven to cut the state of Washington's official ribbon on the easternmost border of the continental United States. A few years later she was elected to the Washington State Board of Health. And, in the course of that, she became a true eat-local eater. Staying true to their German heritage, Helen and her husband Kurt own and operate the business, but she is also just as concerned with the quality of the food and outstanding service as she is with their market's aesthetic appeal. Their deli is a welcoming place for lunch or dinner, with ample tables and booths and the large, warm personalities of Helen and Kurt on hand to help make your dining experience fun and memorable. For the past six weeks this site has been packing up and moving from my old location on the east coast, where I'd planned to post a new bit almost every day, to a new location on the west coast, where I hope to post more often. So for the first time in my life, I have absolutely no idea what the new schedule is going to be. I don't think I'll make any promises about a new bit every day, or even every week. The possibilities are too exciting to ignore. I don't know how long I'll be able to get each article up on a daily basis, but I will definitely be sticking to a new piece every few days. So in the meantime, I'm excited to be able to start sharing the amazing journalism that you've entrusted to me over the last six months. I can't even begin to express what that means to me. I've missed sharing so many of the stories that kept me up at night over the last couple months. I also know that the new site will be a little different for you. I'll try to cover a lot more of the local and national stories you'
