"One of the most heartwarming things about a game is when it has something to say. When it resonates beyond the surface of the work. When it proves that games can continue to evolve to be an appropriate, exciting, and moving medium. It's why I'm so glad to announce Kingdom Come: Deliverance." - @prog_pc "These are video games as art, and this is a great example of why. As anyone who has played Grim Fandango can tell you, the surreal visions of that video game are the best you'll ever see in a video game." - @_Gabbi_ "For all of the reasons you'd expect, it's a glorious RPG, with proper weapon generation and magics that feel like they have weight. But you also get to mess around with lots of building mechanics, something which I adore, which is a bit harder to come by these days. What we have here is a vision of what we'd like video games to be in the not-too-distant future. A game that's a daring blend of fantasy, open-world and building." - @spartan600 "If you loved Warhorse's Banner Saga, you'll feel right at home with this game. Kingdom Come: Deliverance is a melancholy story of the hardships of being a peasant." - @kurpap "Kingdom Come: Deliverance immerses you in a fantasy world that's alive and breathing and full of life." - @joincinj "It doesn't feel like it took a lot of time to make this game." - @bizzy "This game is big, and detailed, and while it's a tad on the long side, it has plenty of content, and the gameplay is exceptional." - @amani99 "Anytime you get the chance to run around a gorgeous medieval open world, there are few pleasures finer." - @K_The_Moon "What makes this game so special, is that it's made by so many talented people. The small details that make this feel like a full-fledged action RPG are all taken care of by Warhorse Studios." - @Alevi_Sag "What makes this game so bff6bb2d33

A defective acidity sensor system may contribute to the development of chronic kidney disease and diabetic nephropathy. We hypothesized that renal acid excretion might be altered under basal conditions in diabetic patients. Therefore, we performed metabolic acid-base analysis in fasting and post-methionine acid loaded normo- and microalbuminuric patients with diabetes and normoalbuminuric controls. Normo- and microalbuminuric patients had comparable fasting bicarbonate levels, but metabolic acid-base homeostasis was strongly compromised in the diabetic group, particularly during acid loading. The high incidence of metabolic acidosis (10 of 15) in the diabetic group was caused by insufficient bicarbonate production (increased fractional excretion of bicarbonate) in patients with normal renal function (44+/-3 vs. 26+/-4%, P Manchester 'ordinary')

Lipid raft-associated proteins control insulin receptor signalling during early development. Perturbation of signal transduction pathways can cause profound developmental abnormalities. However, the molecular mechanisms controlling insulin-stimulated signal transduction during development have remained largely unknown. Here we show that during early development in Drosophila, the embryonic insulin receptor (InR) lacks detectable tyrosine phosphorylation when expressed in either cultured cells or in embryos. In contrast, a gain-of-function mutant receptor bearing an extracellular domain deletion induced high levels of phosphorylation, even in the absence of ligand. Moreover, this receptor was able to phosphorylate non-receptor protein substrates upon ligand binding. Antibodies raised against the raft-associated protein Yor1 and against the neddylation enzyme Cullin5, which bind to the InR in a mutually exclusive fashion, were both able to efficiently suppress InR activation and receptor tyrosine phosphorylation. These data indicate that InR signalling is activated through its direct binding to the raft-associated proteins Yor1 and Cullin5. Consistently, InR activation was found to be inhibited in Yor1 mutants, and to be enhanced in Cullin5 mutants. Hence, the developmentally controlled regulation of InR function appears to require the specific interaction of the receptor with raft-associated proteins that in turn control downstream signalling.

The effect of radiation on fibroblast proliferation. Irradiation of human fibroblasts at selected sub-lethal doses between 5 and 100 rads either totally inhibited cell growth or caused a delay in growth. Other cell lines irradiated between the same range of doses did not show a delay. The morphology of these treated cells is also described. It was concluded that the experimental methods used in this investigation are sufficiently sensitive to enable radiation damage to the target fibroblast to be detected.
