`e.classList.remove('disableScrolling');` However, when I use this code, I can no longer scroll, how can I disable scrolling on my table and re-enable it when I add the `disableScrolling` class to the table? A: Dynamically setting the class of the element is one way to do it, but I would recommend just calling the scrolling method again (as it's reusable). Otherwise this would need to be set for every element in the table. `e.style.overflow = 'hidden';` // or whatever value you want it to have `e.style.overflow = 'auto';` This will remove the horizontal scrollbar and switch back to the default behaviour of including the scrollbar, but allow scrolling.

and even in the Georgian attitude towards it. The country's traditions are all-pervasive. The illusion of a separate national identity is not the only danger that a foreign neighbour can pose; another is the creation of a parody of national identity. For this reason Georgia was given a special place in this book - it is not just about history and identity, but a warning about the dangers of a kind of clever mimicry of national culture, which is an expression of individual quirks and quirks and an expression of prejudice.
