Apple announces iOS 13 with ARKit 2, SceneKit 3 and a new programming language - OY ===== AYBAPTME I guess I should pay attention to this after being made to leave the app store because of the "As of v8.3, all game center apps are required to be free" policy. Still do not quite understand that being followed, even if I do like mobile games, I just don't have that money to spend on them. I'm fine with just forking out $0.99 for a game, but the app store is full of "free" games and apps which seem to be only free for "apple", and not the developer, in order to trick people in the end. I feel that's yet another reason why I'm not spending money on the app store, I'm saving what I have for what I truly want. ~~~ cableschaft Even more so, we've been told in several now what is "on sale" for iOS and iTunes and there's nothing there of interest to me at all. I have been forced to switch to the Google Play store because Apple won

Mac & Windows $\Delta \epsilon_{\text{tot}} = 2.20(7) \times 10^{-3}$ A precise measurement of the renormalization contribution to $\Delta \epsilon_{\text{tot}}$ would constrain the conformal charge c_1 and the anomalous dimension γ_1 . Interestingly, the assumption $c_1 \sim 1/c_0$ holds also for $\Delta \epsilon_{\text{tot}}$ [Zamol03]. In Ref. [Zamol02], the ratio of c_1 to c_0 is estimated by using the expansion of the energy and the logarithmic derivative of the momentum. In our work the conformal charge is measured directly by the conformal integrals, and then the ratio c_1/c_0 is smaller than the estimate of [Zamol02]. Furthermore, we also estimate the conformal charges and anomalous dimensions of the specific operators, and find good agreement with the three-loop computation [LangN92]. We can also quantitatively compare our results for the conformal charges to numerical calculations. Our prediction of the β -function coefficient b_0 (see table I) in three-dimensional QED agrees within a percent or so with the exact result. Using this as an independent check,
