* Photoshop Elements: This version of Photoshop is for novice users and is designed to provide fast image editing. Unlike Photoshop CS, it lacks a considerable number of features, such as the ability to align multiple layers, change the resampling quality, create clipping masks, composite images, or crop images. * Photoshop CS: For more extensive editing, this edition adds advanced features such as the ability to align layers (boxes), work with separate channels (color, or grayscale), and edit gradients. It is the perfect tool for users who want to edit pictures quickly to fix small flaws or add a special look to a photo. * Photoshop Lightroom: It is a tool for cataloging and organizing digital images on your computer. They are designed to give photographers more control over the way the camera interprets image data. The PIPs offer five settings in addition to the EOS default settings. The EOS default settings were designed to give the image the same exposure as a normal 35mm camera exposure—though you can set these parameters as low as you want. Each profile is designed to optimize the image quality for a certain type of photography. PIPs are typically designed to use settings that are similar to those in your camera's autoexposure settings. If you take images for a living, you need to be able to see at a glance the difference between a 35mm photograph and a 5D image. The PIP makes this possible by giving you the settings you would use to achieve a great image with a normal camera exposure. Let's take a quick look at some of the PIPs available to you: * _Auto_ : The default setting; your camera will set all exposure parameters based on the Auto setting on the PIP. * _Landscape_ : Used for landscapes. The camera senses the outdoor conditions and makes adjustments to the settings used. * _Port
