Personalisierungen der Klipse. - fetisch.[Responsibility of the patient in the management of his skin disease]. In spite of the modern treatment, there is still a great disparity between the therapeutic goals established by physicians and the expectations of the patient, in particular the patient's expectations of his medical follow-up. The concept of risk/benefit and informed consent may broaden the possibilities of therapeutic communication between the patient and the doctor by clarifying the meaning of the medical status quo. The objective is to undertake a practical discussion of the relationship between medical criteria and expectations on the part of the patient. It is suggested that the patient should not express his medical goals in a manner that is merely academic. The physician should attempt to open a dialogue with the patient concerning his medical situation. Thus, the relationship between medical reasoning and communicative action can be significantly improved. At the same time, it is important for the patient to be aware that the medical act that is being performed on his behalf is an act of risk, not of benefit, to him.

The argument for a risk analysis method is sound, but does not always translate into an improved risk/benefit situation for the patient. Examples and suggestions are discussed. Optimizing Options for Idiopathic Scoliosis in Preoperative Endocrine Treatment. The treatment of scoliosis includes several surgical options from endocrine treatment. The aim of the present study was to compare the efficacy of conventional non-invasive endocrine treatment on spine structural changes and curve correction. The present study
