Beginners: # HTML5

Checklist HTML5 has taken the web by storm and changed the face of the internet. HTML5 is the fifth major revision of the Hypertext Markup Language standard, with a focus on cross-browser compatibility and programmability. You can use HTML5 to design and create dynamic websites that will be fully responsive on any device.

This is a high level overview of what HTML5 markup involves and how it can be used in a web design. 1. HTML5 Tags

The HTML5 standard boasts improved tags for text formatting that is more mobile-friendly and useful than in previous versions of HTML.

Some of these features include * @font-face * @example * pre * cite * big * small * greater * less * trademark 2. Selectors

The @document and @body tags have been combined to give you more control over content styling. The new @document tag supports multiple elements instead of only one, enabling you to control your page's structure better and design pages in a more organized way. 3.

HTML5 Attributes HTML5 looks to strengthen accessibility by giving you more control over your fonts and by allowing you to identify fallback text. In the past, all HTML text had to be supported by the browser. With modern browser advancements, you can actually choose to not display fallback text if the browser is unable to render it. @html *

With respect to developing trust, it is important to explore what role our developmental experiences and our attitudes regarding trusting others may have on our ability to establish trust with new partners. When I receive feedback from friends who have dated multiple people, they often tell me that a vital component for establishing trust is becoming comfortable with uncertainty. When learning about secure attachment style and trust development, I found that much of the data about

With respect to my parents, I found that as an infant, my mother gave me secure attachments, which then allowed me to enjoy multiple healthy relationships throughout my childhood. After finding the feedback I have shared with you, I am consciously attempting to recreate some of the characteristics of my parents in my new relationships. However, I would not be surprised if this was easier to do with those to whom I have already established a trusting relationship.

I know that I can use `Array.resize` with a value of 2 but how do I do it if the positions are predefined? For the sake of clarity here is a sketch:
