Autodesk Inc. 12.Thanks to the extensive use of sensors and networks, the world has entered an era of pervasive computing. One of the technologies enabling pervasive computing is the wide area network (WAN). A WAN is a network that has a connection to the outside world, so it is capable of providing connectivity for multiple end users. A WAN is typically set up to support an enterprise's network with a connection to the public Internet, which makes it convenient for the enterprise to set up and support the enterprise's intranets. When talking about a WAN, two kinds of users are typically contemplated: A node is a source of data or a sink of data. A node may communicate with one or more other nodes to produce data, or it may receive data from other nodes

WeÂ .Abstract: Although HIV-associated dementia (HAD) has been well characterized in vivo, the mechanisms leading to neuronal dysfunction and death are poorly understood. It has been suggested that HIV-1-induced toxicity results from multiple factors including excess viral infection and viral proteins, imbalances in the host antiviral response, and neuronal self-reactivity to viral antigens. Epidemiologic and clinical data indicate that women and African Americans are disproportionately affected by HAD. The basis for these disparities is currently not well understood. The development of HAD is thought to be multifactorial and risk factors include genetic factors, viral load and host response. We have found that genes encoding APOE, a cholesterol-transporting protein that also acts as a ligand for the ApoE receptor, interact with HIV-1 Tat protein to modify the course of AD. Increased expression of the APOE4 allele is associated with AD whereas APOE3 protects against AD. These findings suggest that some individual variations in APOE4 influence disease course. Because HIV-1 replication, similar to?-amyloid, occurs in the brain, we tested the hypothesis that the APOE genotype would affect the rate of brain cell death. Here we report that infected APOE4 mice show more pronounced neuronal death in the hippocampus and neocortex at the early stages of infection compared to APOE3 and
