Among them, there was a country of warriors living beyond all boundaries. This was the Demon King’s country. Daedalus had developed the ultimate technology and brought the Demon King to the depths of the abyss. Therefore, the land was engulfed in the blaze of war, and the country called “The Demon King’s Country” and was covered in darkness and blood. In the midst of all this, there was a king. No land, country, or nation could stand against them. But, just as it seemed that the Demon King would swallow the whole world, the Demon King was toppled. A prince who had fought shoulder to shoulder with his father then appeared. And, that young Prince was a man who had inherited strength of his father, the proof of a hero he would become. From then on, they went on a journey to put an end to the Demon King once and for all. There was a calm world that stood in front of them. The country of “The Three Heroes” had become their goal. In this world, there was a civilization that had not seen many wars. The country was rich, the people were happy, and the land was gentle. The three heroes decided to give this place a name that would symbolize everything they had experienced on their journey to this point. That’s it. It’s done. The last minute blitz. That was a new one on me. The last half hour or so has taken much longer than I thought. The last project is an email-based newsletter to educate people about UT, and to get them on board with the program. This is the first time I’ve done a letter-based newsletter, and I’ve learned a lot from it. First, I want to say that this is not a full-blown project, this is a lark.
