Ultra-Wideband Radiometry (UWR) is a new technology, whose main characteristic is the development of a radiometric link between a satellite and ground station, able to transmit data in bandwidths up to 15 MHz. The transmission capacity is integrated in the satellite and is not limited by the bandwidth of the downlink from the Satellite to the ground. Before the development of UWR, the transmission capacity of single satellites was limited to about 2-3 MHz. This bandwidth represents a lower limit of the transmission capacity available for a satellite. The current in-orbit technology has not been able to develop more bandwidth capacity because of the high cost of payload and launch vehicles and the associated fiscal difficulties. The UWR technology based on the development of the antenna is an innovative method capable to use the current generation of communications satellites. The transmission of data by means of UWR is a network. Two radiometric links can be concurrently established between a single satellite and two ground stations, or a group of satellites in a constellation. This possibility of running two radiometric links is not available in the present standard communications systems. The transmission capacity of a single UWR satellite is between 2.5-10 Gbps over a single connection. Since the transmission capacity is distributed in time and frequency, the possibility of using this mode with differential encoding is given. The maximum data rate is actually limited by the bandwidth of the receive downlink of the satellite, but it can be more than 5 Gbps, in a bandwidth ranging between 1 MHz and 15 MHz. The capacity of a single radiometric link with differential encoding is comparable to that of the system using the Ka band system (for example, the IMAGINE Service, INTA, AX.25) with data rates of 25 Mbps. The UWR technology is based on the Dual Slot Antenna (DSA), based on a phased array of eight radiating elements in pairs. The DSA is a linear one with a wavelength of 1.77 m, with 16 electrical elements and, with the azimuth and elevation beam durations, a beam width of  $\pm 40^\circ$ . The antenna is a PIFA (Planar Inverted F Antenna) one with two horizontal slots and one vertical slot, with a length of 1.2 m and a width of 20 mm. The antenna array can be configured in fixed or on-orbit scanning modes, able to cover an area of up to 200 km of radius, depending on the number of elements. The DSA and its
