Version history: See: Wikipedia's article on the history of AutoCAD. Versions 3 through 13 were originally shipped as AutoCAD LT, a lower cost version for smaller businesses. The LT designation has now been dropped, as the version numbering follows that of the full AutoCAD. Version 1.5 added layering, shown as wireframe in the following image. AutoCAD LT 1.5 was released in April 1985 and AutoCAD was first released on Microsoft Windows in July 1985. The 1.5 version was designed to be inexpensive to acquire for small businesses and hobbyists. AutoCAD LT 1.5 and AutoCAD were available as shareware. The price was US$100 for AutoCAD and US$99 for AutoCAD LT at the time of initial release. This shareware version was available until the initial version of AutoCAD itself became available in July 1985. It was possible to get a free trial of AutoCAD by submitting a request. AutoCAD 2.0 was first released on Microsoft Windows in July 1987. AutoCAD's major upgrade to the 1985 design, it added a new system of work commands and was designed for larger businesses. AutoCAD 2.0 (and the following version numbers) was designed to be inexpensive to acquire for larger businesses. Users of version 1.5 could upgrade to AutoCAD 2.0 by inserting AutoCAD LT 1.5 disks into their AutoCAD system. Version 3 was released in May 1989 and introduced B-rep, a new work model that depicted 3D objects as a collection of their various faces. It also introduced the concept of compound views, the idea of showing all faces of a 3D object at once rather than only a single face. AutoCAD LT 3 introduced the ability to plot graphics. In addition, it introduced the concept of a project. This was the idea of a document that contained information about a single design project. Users could switch between different documents to access different information. AutoCAD LT 3 introduced the ability to plot a series of linear and arc annotations. AutoCAD LT 3 added a new command, LAYEREDCIRCLE, to perform a circle with a constant radius for each layer. In addition, it added the ability to use shared blocks in graphics. AutoCAD LT 3 introduced the ability to store history and pal

Forms: a Graphical User Interface (GUI) for creating and editing drawing information. Through this GUI, users can create an application, configure and maintain their own custom shortcuts. The functions that can be performed are also accessible through keyboard shortcuts. A command line interface (CLI) provides access to the command line for users who want to invoke CAD operations through the command line rather than through the GUI. By using the CLI, users can also run AutoCAD in batch mode, which allows them to perform several CAD operations at the same time. CAD-based Applications Some companies offer AutoCAD-based applications to their customers. These applications are often web-based and provide a wide range of functionality to their customers. AutoCAD Architecture is a popular example of a tool for architectural design based on AutoCAD. Some of the applications for which Autodesk produces an AutoCAD-based application include: Autodesk Navisworks Autodesk Forge for GIS Autodesk Map3D Autodesk Revit Architecture Autodesk Data Management Autodesk Pix -3D Autodesk BIM 360 AutoCAD Architect - Architecture Autodesk Revit - Civil and Industrial Design Autodesk Revit - Mechanical and Electrical Design AutoCAD Electrical - Electrical Design AutoCAD Civil 3D - Civil and Structural Design Autodesk A360: Construction/AEC (A360) Autodesk A360: Engineering (A360) The AutoCAD Architect - Architecture application was released in 2015, and was designed for users who wanted a robust CAD application for architectural design. The application also enabled users to create 3D models of objects. It offered a highly flexible workflow, and also provided a PDF export. AutoCAD for Mobile Devices As of version 2012, AutoCAD introduced its first mobile-compatible application. Called AutoCAD Lite, it is designed for iOS and Android devices. AutoCAD Lite allows users to view and edit architectural drawings on mobile devices. The application also allows users to annotate or add notes to the drawings. It is also possible to use one or more mobile devices as remote control devices to send data to the computer. AutoCAD for Web AutoCAD for Web was first released in October 2009. More than 1.5 million prisoners are required to be tested for Hepatitis C, but one in four are not due to significant cuts in health spending and failure by the NHS to implement the tests, new research has found. A study by the Health Protection Agency (HPA) into the number of prisoners who have been offered the free, quick and easy test which could save them up to 30 years of future liver disease has found that, despite being repeatedly offered the service, only one in four prisoners is tested each year. The study, which analysed the national data for England, also found that the largest number of prisoners - more than 1.4 million - were not offered the test in the last financial year, despite the NHS saying it was a condition of parole. Nearly three quarters of all prisoners were offered the test in 2012-13, and more than half of all prisoners were offered it last year. However, in 2014-15, only one in four prisoners were offered the test, the study found. Download the new Independent Premium app Sharing the full story, not just the headlines A spokesperson for the Prison Reform Trust, which published the study, said: "Despite clear guidelines, it appears that NHS spending on prisons is being cut while prisoner health care costs are being spared. "The result is that the most vulnerable prisoners are not being offered an opportunity to protect their health. This is completely unacceptable and in the interests of the health and well-being of the whole population." Concerns about the cost of providing testing to prisoners was highlighted in the Independent on Sunday in October 2011, when it was revealed that the cost of testing more than 1.5 million people was £54 million a year. The costs of the tests are split between the NHS, which foots the bill, and the Department of Corrections which pays for the work done by staff at prisons.
