Synopsis: Indian Horror, Based On A Novel "The Human Stain". In this film, an American woman (Nicole Kidman) who

How do you monetize a low-value product? - adrianwaj I just don't get the model that Patrick McKenzie is using to sell Flipboard. I guess I am dumb. Does anyone here know what he's doing? ===== diamondhead I actually think I have this problem right now. Actually, I should have tried to do something similar to you. I just got an idea for a facebook (hot or not type) app. And I can't figure how do I monetize this. I would like to know a lot too. I'm thinking of putting together a survey in the facebook interface to help people. I was thinking of applying for the YC Summer 08 program. I can just put up there some of the ideas, and they will fund the development. Maybe that will work. ----- webwright "The government or those to whom the government defaults -- the Haves -- controls the means of production. The rest of us -- the Have-Nots -- therefore live at their sufferance." That quote pretty much sums up the current economic state. Unfortunately, empirical studies are wildly different on what types of causes lead to unemployment and why. In terms of monetizing, I'd suggest reading the following books: 1) "Between Debt and the Avalanche" 2) "The Undercover Economist" 3) "Why Smart Executives Fail" (because it's a book, but because the research is pretty interesting) ~~~ adrianwaj "Why Smart Executives Fail" ----- jamiequint There are a ton of options. There are two methods I use: 1\ Advertising: this is what we did at my last two startup jobs. The first job was a cell phone accessory company, this was ad supported. The second job (going for it with a home business this time) was for a marketing automation company. All our products were niche (home-shopping software for brick-and- mortar stores) and we sold the power of targeting ads to a niche market 6d1f23a050
