An improved method for glutathione measurement in animal cells was developed. The method is based on the procedure of Cavagnaro et al. (1979), who demonstrated the production of 1-chloro-2,4-dinitrobenzene during the acidification of cells. The method was further improved to extend measurements to as low as 1 mg protein/ml and to run in a manner to avoid the interference of nucleotides and proteins. The method was applied to study the variation of glutathione content in normal and tumor cells. The correlation coefficients between the derived concentrations and those determined by conventional methods were 0.9994 and 0.9994 for normal and tumor cells, respectively 6d1f23a050
