Not only do you have to fight off the same small cadre of baddies repeatedly, but the arena battles seem totally random. Who wins depends on the weapon you bring. A spear man can kill an ax-wielder with a lucky thrust. A gladiator who normally doesn't have much luck in battle will turn it around. Sometimes, you'll win with less than three lives, and this decreases your RPS (Rank Points Strength) to a mere 0.5 RPS. You can only improve your RPS by acquiring the best weapons and armor. Armor just takes you out of the fight immediately. You're then responsible for finding the weapons and armor yourself. This varies wildly. Sometimes, you just find a pleasant set of weapons and armor lying around and you can set off to do things. Sometimes, it's a chore. Think of the real Gladiators: they have, on average, about four minutes of excitement per hour of acting out their ancient battle routines. That's assuming that they're enjoying themselves in the first place. With that in mind, it's no wonder that you'll find yourself repeating the same actions over and over again. Not even your fellow slaves are in the mood to take part in such tedium: everyone is looking for a way out. In one of the games, a fellow slave succeeds in getting to the real battle, only to be killed by a Balthazar (a guard). You'll probably find yourself repeating this process again. Colosseum might just be a little boring, but it's still an essential part of the the concept: the freedom is just as much of a grind as the slavery. Unlike other video games, you must follow Colosseum's rules in order to win. The game does a good job of explaining what you can and can't do while playing, and this is the only other positive that can be said about the game.
