not all pirates are bad. there are good pirates, as well as bad pirates. in some stories, the good pirates have a clear moral code based on the concept of honor, but the bad pirates don't. some pirates may be morally dubious, but may be well-intentioned nonetheless. there are many choices available to the player and the crew on the sea, and how the story plays out is up to the players. consider your audience. your audience will be comprised of a range of ages and backgrounds. while children may find themselves in the firing line of some situations, many players of all ages enjoy the sense of danger that comes from taking on the roles of pirate and crew member. the impression of danger should not be overplayed, but if your story takes place at sea, we suggest that you consider what that danger is, and how it can be exploited to add tension and excitement. be kind. an environment that is tense and exciting can lead to personal attacks, and that is never an acceptable form of online behavior. do not make or spread defamatory statements about another player or crew. do not threaten players or crew with harm or death. do not harass other players. do not stalk other players or crew members. do not "grief" other players or crew members in front of their friends or family. do not steal the mates of other players or crew members. conduct yourself. do not say or do things that could be seen as disruptive to the game experience, and do not disrupt gameplay or game-related communications. do not create a nuisance to other players or crew members. do not abuse the controls or the teammates of other players or crew members. do not intentionally take advantage of any in-game mechanic for personal gain. 5ec8ef588b
