many of these people are limited to free pc software, because of the limited sound channels of windows sound mixer, the best choice is to use virtual sound canvas, it's pretty good for midi input, the problem is it's pretty big and i haven't found a smaller version, it's also not very stable, but i guess it's a good alternative for pc only users, the gt emulator is very good but it's not free for commercial use, one last option is to use the sc-88 pro hardware synth and the sc-55 emulator program, but i can't find any sound samples of it, so i don't know how good it is or not, the sc-88 pro is quite expensive though, i don't think it's possible to decode the virtual sound canvas sounds and then to play them in the same way it's possible to play real sound canvas sounds, so the hardware sound canvas may be the only option you get for free, if you are looking for a hardware option to the virtual sound canvas, the most direct way would be to buy a sc-88 pro, but if you are looking for a free option, i recommend munt, it's almost identical to the sc-88 and sc-88pro, the quality of the sounds is quite good, and the only problem is that the tempo of the sounds is a bit slow compared to the real sc-88 and sc-88 pro, you can also use a free sc-88 emulator, but i don't know how good it is, to develop the software, which is available at , roland's original vsc (virtual sound canvas) sound bank files that support gs-1, gs-2, gs-3, etc. were used, however, the main differences are that vsc-mp1 is a multi-pack that can read multiple sound bank files, and a modified version of vsc-va (virtual sound canvas va) for vst, additionally, another sound bank file of vsc-mp1 that contains midi data of the gs-1 model sc-55 is also included in this package, the download is a windows executable file, and then the soundbank for the sc-55 is included.
