another way to use usb is to connect a usb mouse, keyboard, or other usb devices, into your laptop or pc, and use that to connect up things you'd normally plug into the pci or pc card slot. for instance, you can use a usb mouse with a laptop, and use it to navigate while you work. or you can do the same thing with a usb keyboard, and use it to work on a desktop from a laptop. this lets you avoid opening the pc and taking up space in the case, and also lets you hook up an external usb printer (even an older one) and use it. see a list of usb devices , and get their particulars from newegg.com. most of these will work, but some won't. the biggest problem i ever had with these was with the usb host controller, since i was using a dell d430. but that problem has been corrected. very easy to use usb devices. and lastly, let's say the power supply fails (for example, the fan stops). usb still works, and so does the adapter. i may be a bit out of my element when it comes to this, but i've been able to use my laptop from a hotel room using the usb ports on the back. i've also put the adapter into a desktop computer, and run it up for a month or so, and it's still going strong (even in the little closet where the computer lives). in windows vista and later, windows has a feature called usb selective suspend, and in windows xp sp2 and later, the function usb hibernate, which allows the usb root hub to be kept on during extended hibernation. select enable the usb root hub to stay on during extended sleep or hibernation. this will prevent the usb root hub from automatically suspending. if you do not have this option you will see a warning that the power state of the usb root hub cannot be set. 5ec8ef588b
