Dynamic Presurgical Corneal Deformation Model for Reconstructing the Wrinkles of the Wearing Surface. A dynamic corneal presurgical deformation model is introduced to simulate the corneal deformation caused by the wearing of contact lenses. The corneal deformations of the apex, the periphery, and the equator of the cornea are established in this study. Based on the three-dimensional (3-D) reconstructed corneal surface, the corneal deformation model is developed based on the finite element (FE) method. The values of the fitted parameters are related to the contact surface parameters and the intraocular pressure of the eye. The designed model is applied in the process of calculating the surface position of the cornea under two wearing conditions of the contact lens. The experimental result shows that the value of the corneal diameter at the apex is 3.
