these hackers could be part of an organized crime gang and could then blackmail you, steal from you, or commit identity theft against you. hackers can also get the legal system involved. in the case of companies like facebook, they have also been involved in investigations into similar hacking activity. how can you protect yourself from these types of hackers? the basic rule is, if its online, it probably can be hacked. hackers are not hack any software, operating system, or site. they'll use any vulnerability to break into your computer. use a good browser, or a virtual machine, such as a virtual private server, to keep your information safe. use strong passwords, and don't reuse the same password on multiple sites, whether you have accounts at the websites directly or not. always use virus or other software scans on your machine, in addition to a regular windows scan. setup up a firewall, and use the built-in security in windows 7. these can also disable the start menu, the right-click context menu, and the desktop. also, it is strongly recommended that you be familiar with the policies and general guidelines for the websites you frequent and use, and that you follow the rules the website or retailer puts in place to prevent identity theft. if you're unsure of how a website operates, ask a store manager or someone else at the site. you'll be better off if you have a firewall and antivirus, but i would advise against running a firewall on windows as a stand alone product. most antiviruses come with their own firewalls, and im not aware of any antivirus products that haven't also included a firewall. 5ec8ef588b
