Abortions in Iceland

Abortions in Iceland are legal in certain circumstances. As of 2015, no form of abortion is legal in Iceland without the consent of the pregnant woman. The law further stipulates that the risk of the woman to the health of the fetus is non-existent or minimal. There are no specific procedures outlined in the law, and most of the women give consent to an abortion privately before the procedure takes place. The abortion rate is high, being approximately three per 100 women. Religious objection to abortion can be cited in respect of matters concerning the self-determination of women. It is entirely subject to a court to rule on the fact if a woman who has objected has a valid religious reason. There are three recognized religious groups that have a significant presence in Iceland: The Catholic Church and the two Lutheran Churches, the Evangelical Lutheran Free Church of Iceland and the Icelandic Evangelical Lutheran Church. These churches are ecumenical bodies, meaning that they are open to all members of the Church, despite their differing theological views on other matters. In 1995 the Catholic Church considered voting on a proposal to introduce a ban on abortion. The majority of lay and clergy voted to reject the proposal. By their own rules they were also not allowed to decide whether women could be forced into having an abortion in cases of rape or incest, but rather were required to refer such cases to the legal system. History During the pre-modern period 79a2804d6b
