The biggest dead-end in Photoshop the software is not the price tag. Rather, it is the fact that it is basically an image editor, cloud storage service, photo viewing application, RAW converter, and scanner. The first three things you can do with Photoshop are the same as any other photo editor; they include cropping, resizing, and color correction. One of the reasons people do not want Photoshop is because they have no idea what to do with it once they open it. With this update, it now includes other programs. For example, you can now, find Adobe's own image editing program, Lightroom, inside the app. (Yes, you can also work with Lightroom side-by-side, but it's not the focus of this new update.) PSD and PSDx support for over 6,000 devices, address your specific needs with specialized filters and tools, search on each device and navigate the file - quickly. To enable PSDx support for backward compatibility with past PSD versions, new location filters and revisions audits have been added to the file system, providing an easy transition to PSDx and use of existing PSD files with legacy display systems. Adobe has also extended the user interface for working with existing PSD projects. (Track changes, comments and comments, and user interface improvements for PSD files in the past, present and future can be found in the release notes.) Have you ever wanted to use the functions available in Lightroom inside an app? Well now you can. You can now open Lightroom or Photoshop files inside of Photoshop. This update allow you to get a similar experience to that of using Adobe Lightroom on your iOS device. This new feature is fantastic and great if you have a Photoshop file as a Lightroom catalog and you want to open it inside of Photoshop.

The new Photoshop updates are loaded with a lot of exciting new features. To add more excitement around the newest version, Adobe has rolled out a 'Day of the Dead' promotion for the February updates. This promotion will award a discount voucher to users who purchase the software update and download and install it on their machine on launch day. The voucher is valid for a one-seat 10% discount on any other Adobe software in the Join Shop at adobe.com. Users can also purchase accessories at the discounted price through the store. This is one of the best features that Photoshop users are waiting for. While some of you may not use the features, most of you are surely interested in the Raw feature, since it means raw file support for the software. Even if you're not a photographer, this feature does have huge implications to you. In order to gain access to this feature, you have to be running the newest update or later on, and you have to have a release of ICC enabled in the System Image Viewer. The ICC profiles will enable the handling of raw color data along with its 16-bit or 8-bit attributes. This means you can have more control over the colors in your images. Photoshop has also offered this feature through the Stripe Control panel. The update is great way to start with the latest version of the software. While many of you may be excited to try out new features straightaway, Adobe has recently introduced a new feature, named Flex Pro, which will enable designers to create 2D applications that work with native mobile device sensors. This new feature will allow designers to create applications that react to specific sensors, such as the accelerometer, gyroscope and compass. The new update will be available for free as a stand-alone download or as an update to version CS6. For additional information, visit the Flex Pro site here.

Processing Images in a Browser: The feature allows users to post-process images on the web via a Preview Work Area (PWA) window in a browser, similar to sharing a Link on social media. The PWA appears in a pre-populated preview screen that contains all the features users would have on the desktop, providing a browser-based workspace for sharing and collaborating on a project. The PWA now opens in a browser window directly, as opposed to opening in a browser tab as it did previously. This design change provides a cleaner user interface that is in line with web standards.

Selection Improvements: Photoshop enhances its selection and masking engine to provide better consistency, accuracy, and quality to selections made in Photoshop, as well as greater support for selections. This feature allows users to select an object, or sub-selection and still be able to make edits in Photoshop, and duplicate and merge objects without leaving Photoshop. The new features support a wider range of image types, including high-resolution photographs, large-format images, and 3D content.

Delete and Fill Tool: The Delete and Fill tool is a single action now. It provides a one-click, automatic solution to deleting and filling objects in images. The tool uses the epitome of AI technology in Photoshop to fill and delete objects. Using Sensei AI-powered AI accelerators, the tool abstracts away the complexity of multiple layers to quickly and easily delete, remove, and replace objects in images, all with a single action.

Many photoshoppers may know Adobe Photoshop that supports simple shapes like squares, freeform, ellipses, arcs, and other shapes. When we render an image in Photoshop, only pixels remain and the shape gets flattened. But thanks to this feature, we can manipulate and change the shape of an image to make it into a freeform, square, rectangle, rotated rectangle, ellipse, etc. from a simple rectangle. When opening an image in Photoshop, it takes a lot of time to load the file. It is mainly because of the number of layers and layers which are stacked together. This has always been the problem with conventional Photoshop. But it is now well addressed with Adobe Photoshop. Users can always load the image by pressing the Cmd + Spacebar that brings up the loading bar. It does not take that much time to load an image. Also, you can use the Auto Save option to save the image every hour. Also, it saves the last 10 images by default and it is updated at the time of saving. The history feature of the Photoshop allows us to delete, merge, split, move, or duplicate layers. It does not erase the original edits on the layers. We can go back to any previous state by restoring or erasing the last history state that we worked on a certain layer. We can also “clear” the history of a layer by pressing Cmd + Z or Cmd + Shift +Z on the keyboard. Encrypted documents are required to be password protected. Here you can protect any document that you have using any password. The password can be completely changed or added while exporting the original document.

With this shift to new API hardware support, it is no longer possible to have multiple GPUs running at once. A new licensing model is accompanied, too, where Adobe is pushing a “minimum cost” licensing model that will include all the software resources. But, better yet, Photoshop will now work best when there is one GPU. This has been the primary cause of upgrading to the newer APIs. Expect the next release of Photoshop to also be the first to ship with the new API. The shift to new APIs isn’t a surprise for most but the last several years have seen a growing ecosystem for GPU-enabled endpoints, offering a whole new level of flexibility never before seen. Both Microsoft in the form of DirectX, and Apple with Metal, have sought to bring to designers and developers the power of modern APIs. In the next release, Adobe will move to the more modern and standards-based AI driven features of Photoshop and the other Adobe apps and products. They include AI powered changes such as “Apply One of N’s Shadows” which matches filters to an image, creating transparency and shadows. This can create amazing effects such as allowing a photo to appear on another reality, as if it comes to life! AI driven technology has gained traction in the design world and is no longer solely limited to creative tools and image processing. Devices like Windows 10 Cloud Assistants and Google’s Assistant are making AI more accessible and easier to use for everyday tasks. And with the new Adobe Design properties that Adobe is launching, AI is even more accessible. This will be a truly exciting time and it’s certain to be an exciting time for photographers too!
