And, to help bring an imaging breakthrough to customers across devices and workflows, Photoshop Creative Cloud subscribers can now use Photoshop CC in the browser (beta). Photoshop Creative

Cloud brings the power of Photoshop CC to anyone, on any device and multiple locations, by providing access to the same tools, features and media that a desktop application provides from a browser window. "Adobe's commitment to innovation is driven by customer demand," said Shantanu Narayen, CEO of Adobe. "Back in January 2017, we announced our intention to move Photoshop to a subscription model, and today, we are excited to share that we are launching our first milestone of that plan: Photoshop Creative Cloud. We know that people love working with their family and friends to share and review their work, and we want to make it even easier for them to stay collaborative on their projects. With Photoshop Creative Cloud, we made this work even simpler and now we're sharing it publicly so that we can get feedback from others. It's a big vote of confidence in the new subscription model." In other news, today at Adobe MAX, Photoshop will get a Fusion Watermark 3.0 plug-in, designed to mask faces in watermarked images. This is an important feature for anyone who wants to embed watermarking (or any other data) into their documents, and use a library rather than teaching people how to open their documents in Photoshop. Erik Larsen, CEO of Vectorworks, said, "The built-in watermark tool in Photoshop (and others) is actually the worst solution on the market for embedding watermarking information into a document. It is very slow, so it can't search for the right place to put a watermark, and it tends to leave a black square where the watermark is located. The new Fusion Watermark 3.0 plug-in makes it easy to embed a watermark into a document, and then find the right place to put it using a built-in library of colors and shapes that the user already has in the document."
