The new usability and workflow in Photoshop CS6 really make me appreciate why Adobe bought Nik. I feel like it's a much more complete package and does what I'm used to with PS. PS followed the philosophy to be a free application so I think it's a worthy upgrade for anyone. Lightroom as a 4k editing tool is, not only in resolution, but is also a very comprehensive one. With its powerful selections tools and advanced editing functions, it lets you manipulate the edits and add-ons in a creative way. Adobe Photoshop Lightroom is the best tool to edit your photos in resolution or 4k resolution. There is no point in holding back. Let go and embrace it. Enjoy the new possibilities. Compared to Lightroom, Photoshop on the iPad is much faster. Adobe claims a one second lead on Lightroom on the iPad. I could not test that claim, as I could never get Lightroom to even load on the iPad. For the few images that I have tried creating in it, it took anywhere from 5 seconds to one minute for Lightroom to load. I have not tested Photoshop. I don't anticipate changing anything with respect to navigating, erasing, etc., because I find the iPad to be much better for that kind of thing than a laptop. It's faster and much more intuitive. Despite not having a totally intuitive interface, Photoshop Elements is still very easy to use. The controls are intuitive and a fairly easy process to memorize. It doesn't feel cluttered and is not as frustrating to use as some other Adobe products. It's also not as crowded with features as Lightroom. Adobe used a single screens to work through the whole process from "Controls" to "Import Settings" and much of the hard work has already been done for you. The final product is a handy tool that will allow you to add your own creativity to a wealth of images with virtually no learning curve. It is my number one recommendation for anyone who would like to capture their life's moments on a computer.

For me personally this is a great update. Hopefully the features will cater to people that have been on older versions of Photoshop. Let me explain. Just like our ER and the LR, this new Photoshop has both an Eraser feature and a Clone tool. The advantages of the Eraser are that you can blend and change your photo to where you want it without having to go back in and change things. Essentially it is a more advanced grade school function. With the Clone tool you can get all kinds of editing done without having to go back and edit. You can essentially set the photo to always be what it was when you took it. For a mass change it might be a process to clone out a ton of different areas you want to change. However, if your photos are already that way that will save you lots of time. Every new feature has its own pros and cons. If you are on Lightroom, chances are that you will use both. If your new to Photoshop and want to improve, then the Photoshop app is a great tool to get the most out of what you do there. However, I will make a note that the newly released app is tweaked for the iPad. With the final pricing for a Creative Cloud subscription around $13 per month, photographers can now also choose the portfolio generation feature for a small additional annual fee. Creative Cloud members who purchased Adobe's previous Media Cloud (a.k.a. Facebook Media) service, typically for 12 months, can purchase the new service and get a one-year subscription to all of the cloud products in the Adobe Creative Cloud portfolio for $12.99 per month. e3d0a04c9c
